"A Letter to Our Readers and Their Parents!"

IT IS OUR EARNEST HOPE THAT YOU ENJOY reading our magazines. You know, there are many different kinds of stories, and we get a different kind of satisfaction from each one. We like the stories of Robin Hood and the Iliad of Homer, because we can imagine ourselves heroes, overcoming the enemy. We like stories of great men in history, because they make us ambitious to do good, kind deeds. We like stories of mischievous boys like Tom Sawyer, because Tom does many of the things we would enjoy doing, but some of them we cannot do.

Some of you probably choose books with a lot of pictures, because the pictures seem to make the story live. That, to some extent, explains your interest in comics.

In our magazines, we try to give you good pictures and interesting stories. We would like to feel, also, that we are helping you to take a stand in favor of right and justice, develop respect for law and order, and learn to protect weaker people, just like the heroes in our adventure stories.

The grown-ups of this world owe you young people an apology, because we haven't made the world a very secure and peaceful place in which to live. Our comics portray, it is true, some of the unhappy things that happen in the world. But they are things you know about anyway—and in the stories, at least, the good people always win. All of us wish it were that way in real life as well.

Just as there are good and bad people, good and bad radio programs, good and bad movies, so there is good and bad literature. In order to help you always choose the good, we will continue to do our best to maintain a high standard in our own magazines.

Please remember that comics, with their many pictures, are just one type of literature. We also want you to grow familiar with the great books in our vast literary heritage, and we have no doubt that, with guidance from your parents, teachers, and town librarians, you will become interested in those classics, and learn to love them.

Meanwhile, don't forget, though you can get the thrill of humor and adventure in comic magazines—they should, nonetheless, be considered in two ways: Not only for the pleasure they give you, but also as a stepping-stone to your appreciation of books that have stood the test of time as reading fare for all people, young and old.

Incidentally, one of our recent editorials used the word "endorsement" in connection with Dr. Thompson's services to us as Editorial Consultant. In the interest of further clarification of Dr. Thompson's functions, we wish to state that Marvel Comic Group submits all its published magazines to Dr. Thompson for review, criticism, and report to our staff, which is under constant instruction to accept Dr. Thompson's criticisms, and to abide by the same. In this way, we constantly strive to bring better comic magazines to our vast group of readers.

PLASTER MODEL

TRUDY AND BELLE sat down on the lawn in the park to remove their tennis shoes. Trudy had a face as long as the map of North America. "Wouldn't you know it? Courts all filled up for the day. Nothing ever happens to me. After all our plans for meeting the pro today, fizz—it's over!" She struggled with the knot in her shoe.

Belle didn't look too happy either. "Some things do happen to you, Trudy. At least you have a date with Ben tonight. I'll probably stay home and do my homework."

"Ben! Oh, he's very exciting!" Trudy sarcastically retorted. "What do we ever do? Go look at artistic store windows, that's all. He talks of nothing but design, color, space, form. I walk my feet off every Saturday night with him—looking at windows."

Both girls slipped their trim feet into play shoes and ambled home. Trudy's parting words to Belle were, "I wish something exciting would happen to me just once."

The phone was ringing when she entered the house. "Maybe this is it," she told herself as she flew to it. "Hello," she said excitedly. Ben answered. "Oh, hello, Ben," she said droopily.

"Trudy," he shouted, "the most wonderful event of my career is about to take place." Trudy didn't answer so he continued, "Dad is letting me trim his store window for him tonight. Picture me doing a sharp job with ladies' formals! I've been making plans all day."

Trudy interrupted him, "But where do I come in? I thought we had a date tonight."

"Oh, Trudy, I'm sorry, but will you give me a rain check on that? I can't turn down this terrific chance . . ."

Trudy banged the receiver onto the hook. "How do you like that?" she muttered. "I don't even have a date with Ben tonight. Nothing—but nothing—ever happens to me!"

She ran upstairs and decided to shampoo her hair, fix her nails, and settle down for the evening with her homework. All of it was awfully dull. She kept feeling it wasn't right for a girl her age to be home on a Saturday night.

At eight o'clock the phone jangled into the Latin conjugations. Trudy jumped up and ran to it. "Trudy!" she heard Ben's excited voice. "My plans have changed. Can you come right down to the store? I just have to see you."

"Do you, Ben?" she answered coolly. "I'm very busy with my homework."

"Well, do it tomorrow. This is a formal party. Just heard about it, and we're both invited. Don't be a droop. C'mon down. Sorry I can't call for you, but I have to finish this window."

"Don't be long. The party starts in twenty minutes. I'll be waiting."

Trudy flew upstairs. She wanted to call Belle to tell her that something exciting was happening after all, but twenty minutes wasn't much time for a girl to dress for a formal. She brushed out her soft, newly-shampooed flaxen hair, dabbed make-up on her face, and jumped into her gown. She slipped her feet into gold sandals, and in fifteen minutes she was excitedly hurrying towards Main Street. Homework was forgotten. There was always tomorrow.

Ben was in the store window, draping a beautiful model. He had one hand on her head. Trudy stared, then rapped on the plate glass window. He seemed excited as he grabbed up the plaster model and hurried to the door.

"If I didn't know that gal was plaster, I'd be jealous," Trudy greeted him. "Can't you leave your work for a minute?"

"No—yes," he answered nervously as he put the model aside. "Am I glad to see you. C'mon in." He closed the door stealthily.

"Where's the party, Ben?" Trudy asked as she sat down.

"Please don't sit down. I'm in a jam, but good. There isn't a formal party tonight—no anything—only me in a jam!"

Trudy groaned. "I might have known. Nothing exciting ever happens to me. You just wanted me down here all dressed up to keep you company. Right?"

"Wrong! Listen, Trudy," Ben's face was pained, "I need you now more than I've ever needed anybody. I told you there was a formal just to get you down here in a hurry." She tried to speak, but he hurried on, "Look, I broke this model's head. See?" He pointed dismally at the broken head. "If my father finds out, I'm definitely through!" He grabbed Trudy's hand. "You're the one who's always looking for excitement. Well, chick, this is it. I want you to go into that window and pose like a model until I fix her head."

Trudy stared at him. "You want me to stand in your window—and pose like a plaster model?"

"Certainly! What else? No one will know the difference. You're better looking than all of Dad's models put together. I'll have that head fixed in about half an hour. Are you up to it?"

Trudy gulped. This was it. This was the excitement she had wanted. Opportunity was knocking. "Ben," she told him, "I am more than up to it. I'll be happy to pose as your luscious model in formal dress for thirty minutes."

Ben sighed with relief. "You're really tops, Trudy," he told her. "I knew I could rely on you. We've got to hurry before Dad or the cop on the beat comes along. If anyone see a model missing, my name is mud. The burglar alarm will go off, squad cars will come . . ."

Trudy watched him hurry to the storeroom with the plaster model. Then she slipped into the display window and struck a pose. Ben wasn't even worried about how she'd look. He didn't care what pose she took. Ben had faith in her. That thought gave her courage.

Trudy put her right foot forward and flung her right hand up gracefully. She put her left hand casually on her hip. Her chin was high. She remembered that all models looked extremely happy. Trudy tried to think of all the happy events that might happen to her. Ben would become more romantic; exciting days were coming—lots of formal parties, beach parties when school was out . . .

She tried very hard to be calm as two juniors, Amy and Al, came strolling down Main Street. "Golly, they're stopping here," she said to herself as she saw them look into the window.

"Isn't that a lovely formal?" she heard Amy say.

"So-so," Al answered. "It's the model that's lovely. If she were real, I'd date her right away!"

"Oh, you would, would you?" Amy retorted as she pulled him away.

Trudy breather a sigh of relief and relaxed for a second. Then she heard pounding footsteps coming down the street. Striking her pose quickly, she muttered, "Golly, it's a policeman—Sergeant Murph!"

Sergeant Murph stood before the window and stared at her. Then he took off his cap and scratched his head amazedly. "What next? Those artists sure make models look real these days." Relieved, Trudy listened to his retreating footsteps. Her arms were about to drop with fatigue when Ben finally opened the door.

"How ya doing?" he whispered. "I've got the head all fixed. Relax inside while I put this plaster model back in place."

Trudy collapsed on the nearest chair. In two seconds, Ben was beside her. "You saved my life, Trudy, and my career. How about a malted? You're definitely my dream girl, and you know what else?"

"No, what else?" Trudy asked indifferently as she rubbed her numb arms.

"The phone has been ringing ever since you entered the window. Everyone in town wants to buy your dress, and every dress store in town wants a model like you. Dad called, and he thinks I'm wonderful, but it's all because of you, Trudy. Aren't you excited?"

"No, Ben, I'm not excited. Let's get a malted," she calmly told him as she took his arm.

Life can be really beautiful, she thought. Nice quiet evenings in the future with Ben, strolling down Main Street looking at store windows from the outside—and never again from the inside!

By KENT B. STILES

Uncle Sam's final three commemoratives on the 1948 thirty-stamp program were the 3-cent blue with its vignette carrying part of a monument of Abraham Lincoln and a quotation from his Gettysburg Address eighty-five years earlier; the 3-cent red for the centenary of the American Turners Society, the design including that health organizations emblem; and the 3-cent red-violet for the centenary of the birth of Joel Chandler Harris, creator of the "Uncle Remus" Negro fictional character.

Before the last of these appeared, the Post Office Department had announced a few of the stamps being planned for 1949. These include the following:

A 6-cent red airmail, to meet the increased first-class airmail rate. Design, a DC-4 plane. Date of release, Jan. 18, at Washington.

A 4-cent red airmail postal card. Design, an eagle in flight with outstretched wings. Date of release, Jan. 10, at Washington.

For the bicentenary of the founding of Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Va. Color and design of this 3c item not immediately disclosed. Date of release, April 12, at Lexington.

A 3-cent commemorative in connection with Puerto Rico's first elected Governor taking office. Details not immediately made available.

For the centennial of Minnesota Territory. Details not immediately disclosed.

Commemorating the founding of Alexandria, Va. Details not immediately announced.

The Post Office Department is expected to issue also a stamp for the 150th anniversary of the District of Columbia.

Other special stamps likely will appear during 1949—but collectors are hopeful that the total will not reach 1948's deluge!
